

CHICKS!

What could be more fascinating than holding a newly hatched chick? For many students this was their first experience holding a baby animal and it was very exciting! We hope that by caring for and observing our chicks, First Graders learn the meaning of the word “steward.” One goal of the bird study is to instill a love and respect for the natural world in our students. Along with being able to articulate why birds matter, we hope each student will take the experience of holding this chick to become good stewards of our local bird population, our environment and the world.
